Grainne graduated from UCD with a BA degree in 1987. Having completed a Diploma in Information and Library Studies, she worked in a wide variety of corporate and academic libraries. She has worked for RCSI (Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland) since 1996.

Her particular interest is in the teaching of information literacy at undergraduate and postgraduate levels. In an information environment that is increasingly electronic and constantly changing, students need the skills to both find information efficiently and to evaluate and manage information effectively. Information literacy skills are essential to practicing evidence-based healthcare, to continuing professional development and life-long learning.
